great things about your wiki project

The video that you chose about the perfect book maker gave us a good idea about how the machine worked. It was also very relevant to the topic.

We are very interested in the flexible paper and you have inspired us to look more into it.

We didn't know much at all about New Scholarship and Emerging forms of Publication when we first looked at the Horizon Project. You have helped us to understand what it means and you have simplified the information so that we now have a better understanding of what the impacts are of this trend.

suggestions for improving your wiki project

A lot of people from around the world are looking at your wiki. You could try to include information from other countries to help people from other parts of the world understand the impacts of this trend.

At times we had trouble working out what images/media files went with what paragraph. We also had difficulty working out which work was yours and which work came from other sources.

piece of new knowledge that our group has thanks to your wiki

We had no idea that it was possible to publish a book on the internet. We are now aware of just how easy it is to publish content on the web and the impacts this quickness will have on our futures. In particular we were fascinated by the book making machine – PerfectPrint.
